From the tractor

Steve Troxler
Commissioner

Activity at the five state-operated farmers markets has picked up and the facilities are brimming with shoppers in search of plants, vegetables, food products, crafts and more.

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services operates markets in Asheville, Charlotte, Colfax, Lumberton and Raleigh, and each is unique to the region it serves. In addition, many communities have their own farmers markets featuring the freshest fruits and vegetables available.

Farmers markets are great destinations for people looking to reconnect to the earth, support local farms, or just take in a fun activity with the family.

Interest in locally grown commodities continues to grow. In fact, a recent article in USA Today focused on agritourism and the "eat-local movement." In that article the writer mentioned the word "locavore," which I learned was the New American Oxford Dictionary's word of the year for 2007, and means basically a person who prefers to eat locally grown foods.

I'm all in favor of the eat-local movement. In fact, when I talk to groups across the state, I often mention that everybody can help support North Carolina farmers and North Carolina agriculture by buying locally grown commodities and food products.

I believe it is important to make the connection between the farm and the

Cost-share program to help N.C. farmers recovering from drought

North Carolina farmers reeling from drought can obtain help under a program recently unveiled in Raleigh. The program will cover 75 percent of the cost of restoring drought-damaged pastureland and providing additional water supply for livestock and crops.

The N.C. Agricultural Drought Recovery Program will be administered statewide through local Soil and Water Conservation district offices beginning May 1. It was made possible by a $6 million grant from the N.C. Tobacco Trust Fund Commission.

"This grant makes it possible for more than 1,000 farmers and farm operations to restore some of the damage from last summer's severe drought and to prepare, so the next long, hot and dry summer doesn't do as much damage," said Billy Ray Hall, president of the N.C. Rural Economic Development Center.

The Rural Center worked with the General Assembly's Joint Select Committee on Agriculture Drought Response, the Tobacco Trust Fund Commission, several state agencies and other agricultural interests to design the program and arrange funding. The Division of Soil and Water Conservation, which will administer the program, is part of the N.C. Department of Environment and Natural Resources.

Others participating in the program design were the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, North Carolina Grange, N.C.

Farm Bureau, N.C. State University Agricultural Extension Service, N.C. Foundation of Soil and Water Conservation Districts, U.S. Department of Agriculture, N.C. Soil and Water Conservation Commission and Agricultural Advancement Consortium.

"Once again, the partnership on behalf of North Carolina's agricultural community has been exemplary in a time of need," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "Farmers from

Got to Be NC Festival slated for June 5-8 in Raleigh

A four-day festival celebrating North Carolina's agricultural bounty will take place June 5-8 at the State Fairgrounds in Raleigh.

The Got to Be NC Festival will feature a food trade show, antique tractors, draft horse and antique tractor pulls, the official state barbecue cooking championship, carnival rides, a bluegrass band competition and live performances of country, bluegrass and beach music.

Festival hours will be 3 p.m.-midnight Thursday and Friday, and 10 a.m.-midnight Saturday and Sunday. Admission is free. Tickets to events in the Sam Rand Grandstand will be $5.

"We're excited to show off agriculture in North Carolina with dozens of N.C. food companies sampling and offering delicious foods for sale," said

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "In addition, this could be the largest gathering of antique farm equipment in North Carolina, based on the response we've gotten. Mix in the N.C. Barbecue Championship and great music, and it's going to be a real down-home celebration of our agricultural heritage."

N.C. State Fair adds two electric vehicles to fleet

When instructing his crew to fuel up the work trucks at the N.C. State Fairgrounds, Matt Daly can now add “Plug ‘em in” to his instructions.

The State Fairgrounds recently added two electric vehicles to its fleet of maintenance and security trucks, thanks to a Clean Fuel Advanced Technology grant awarded by the N.C. Solar Center at N.C. State University.

“These vehicles are so quiet, and still powerful enough to keep up with our full-sized, gas-powered trucks,” said Daly, fairgrounds facilities supervisor, as he showed off each vehicle’s heavy-duty battery packs where an engine, transmission and gas tank would be.

The E-Ride EXV2 Neighborhood Electric Vehicles can haul more than 1,000 pounds, and run as far as 55 miles on one charge. When plugged into a 220-volt outlet, the vehicles can be fully charged in only three hours, or six hours on a 110-volt outlet. They produce no tail pipe emissions, and are street-legal in 35-mile-per-hour zones.

Security officers patrol the grounds with one of the vehicles, and the maintenance crew uses the other. Daly also plans to use the clean fuel vehicles for educational outreach, and will lead a show-and-tell program for Cub Scout day campers at the fairgrounds in June.

“The State Fair continues to look for more efficient ways to operate,” said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. “These electric vehicles are an environmentally friendly way to get the job done.”

Daly hopes to add more electric vehicles to the fleet in the future, and possibly solar panels to power them. “It seemed like a no-brainer to us to apply for the grant from the Clean Fuel Advanced Technology project,” Daly said. “On our 344-acre campus, we have to rely on vehicles to get around and transport landscaping and maintenance equipment, as well as to patrol for security. Electric vehicles make a lot of sense in light of record-high gas prices, and help reduce our overall environmental impact.”

State Fair employee Matt Daly stands in front of one of two electric vehicles that will be used on the 344-acre fairgrounds campus. The vehicle is one of several ways the State Fair is trying to be more environmentally conscious.

In addition to electric vehicles, the fairgrounds also uses biodiesel to power the Gov. Kerr Scott Building year-round, as well as some midway rides during the annual State Fair. The fair also recycles cooking oil and animal manure, and hopes to expand water recycling efforts in the near future.

The Clean Fuel Advanced Technology project is sponsored by the N.C. Department of Transportation, N.C. Division of Air Quality and the State Energy Office with support from the N.C. Solar Center, Triangle J Council of Governments and Centralina Council of Governments.

AgroTips

Sidestep the high cost of fertilizer by using animal waste as a plant nutrient source

Farm-generated wastes are a widely available and inexpensive alternative to commercial fertilizers. Animal wastes provide essential plant nutrients and also improve soil physical properties, such as water infiltration, aeration and nutrient-holding capacity. Before applying waste material as fertilizer, send a sample to the NCDA&CS Plant/Waste/Solution section. This laboratory tests for levels of plant nutrients and, when necessary, can measure pH, lime value and soluble salts. Based on analytical results, the Waste Analysis Report provides estimated rates of nutrient availability for the first growing season. With this information, you can figure out how much waste it will take to meet the specific nutritional needs of a crop. Supplemental applications of commercial fertilizer may be necessary, depending on rate of nutrient availability, cropping system, environmental guidelines and other factors.

Tissue sampling improves crop production

For high-value crops, in particular, plant tissue analysis is a valuable tool for optimizing monetary inputs and yield. It is a way to monitor the effectiveness of an ongoing fertilization program. It is a way to identify existing or potential nutrient problems. It can also be a way to gauge plant readiness for harvest.

The part of the plant to be sampled and the time of sampling vary by crop. Visit www.ncagr.com/agronomi/pictorial.htm for specific sampling instructions for several major crops. Samples can be dropped off at the NCDA&CS Plant/Waste/Solution lab in Raleigh, mailed through the U.S. Postal Service, or shipped via UPS or Fed Ex. Basic tissue testing costs $5 per sample, and results are typically posted on the NCDA&CS Agronomic Division Web site at www.ncagr.com/agronomi two business days after samples arrive at the lab. Special tests to measure chloride, molybdenum or petiole nitrates cost an extra $2 per test per sample.

Spring and summer are the best times to take soil samples from established lawns and gardens

It is always a good idea to take soil samples several weeks before planting a garden or renovating a lawn; then if lime is needed, you have time to apply it properly and let it begin to work before planting. For established plantings, spring and summer are good times to submit routine samples because that is the laboratory’s off-season and reports are available in about 10 days. If you want to use soil samples as a tool to identify a suspected nutrient problem, collect samples whenever you observe the problem and be sure to fill out the (orange) Diagnostic Soil Sample Information sheet instead of the white Soil Sample Information sheet.

Soil sample boxes and information sheets are available from all county Cooperative Extension offices and from the Agronomic Division office in Raleigh. Information sheets, sampling instructions, and completed reports are also available online at the Division’s Web site.

fork, and shopping at farmers markets is a great way to meet and talk with actual growers about their products.

We all need to have a basic understanding and appreciation of where our food comes from, so we don’t take it for granted. We are blessed in this state and this country with an abundance of food products we grow ourselves. We can thank a farmer for that.

As I mentioned before, the markets are filled with plenty of activity and special events throughout the year, such as the upcoming run of Strawberry Days at the markets. You can find a list of Strawberry Day dates on page 12 of the newspaper, or you can go to www.ncagr.com to find a link to activities at the NCDA&CS markets.

I also want to invite you to attend the Got to be NC Festival in Raleigh June 5-8. This marks the first year of the festival, and I hope its success will lead to many more years of this event. There will be lots of activities to take part in, but one of our main areas of focus will be on the Food Expo, which will showcase the wide variety of products grown or made here in North Carolina. Be sure and make plans to attend. Hope to see you there!

Festival

Teams from across North Carolina will compete in the 2008 N.C. State Barbecue Cooking Championship on Friday and Saturday. It is sponsored by the N.C. Pork Council.

The bluegrass band competition will be in Heritage Circle Saturday from noon to 5 p.m. Bluegrass music by Sweet Potato Pie will be featured daily.

Each night, the Sam Rand Grandstand will host entertainment. Greenville’s Super Grit Cowboy Band kicks off the series Thursday. The Coastline Band of Charlotte brings beach music on Saturday, and Steep Canyon Rangers from Asheville plays bluegrass on Sunday. All concerts begin at 9 p.m. A draft horse and mule pull will take place Friday from 6 to 9 p.m.

Festival sponsors include Kids’ Green Earth, Food Lion, Touchstone Energy, Kerr Drug, Quality Equipment LLC and the Golden LEAF Foundation.

Commissioner Troxler and the Got to Be NC Big Cart take to the road

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler visits with students from Union Elementary School in Shallotte recently to talk about the importance of agriculture to the state’s economy and in feeding a growing population. The kids were also treated to an appearance of the motorized, 13-ft. tall Got to Be NC Big Cart.

Get ready for N.C. strawberries

Strawberry lovers can start getting the shortcake ready. The North Carolina strawberry season has geared up in earnest. “Strawberries were about a week earlier than normal thanks in part to several warm stretches of weather,” said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. Strawberries began arriving the week of April 14 in the coastal areas, the week of April 21 in the central portion of the state and the week of April 28 in western counties. North Carolina’s strawberry season typically runs through May. Growers are reporting good pollination in the fields and are anticipating a good crop this season, said Kevin Hardison, marketing specialist with the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. That means shoppers should be able to find plenty of berries this season in grocery stores, roadside stands, farmers markets and pick-your-own fields. To help consumers, the department is again publishing a directory of pick-your-own farms across the state. It can be found online at www.ncfarm-fresh.com, or consumers can contact Hardison at (919) 733-7136, ext. 234, to have a copy mailed. In stores, shoppers can look for the Got to Be NC and Goodness Grows in North Carolina logos to identify North Carolina berries and other locally grown commodities. In celebration of the red berry, a number of special events and festivals are planned for May. Following is a list of events:

- May 1 – Strawberry Day at the State Farmers Market in Raleigh, 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.
- May 3 –N.C. Strawberry Festival in Chadbourn, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.
- May 9 – Strawberry Day at the Charlotte Farmers Market, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.
- May 16 – Strawberry Day at the Piedmont Triad Farmers Market in Colfax, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

North Carolina ranks third in the nation in strawberry production, and berry sales generated $19.4 million in farm receipts in 2006.

NCD&CS treats gypsy moth infestation in Warren

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services recently treated a gypsy moth infestation in Warren County. The treatment of 502 acres was conducted in cooperation with the U.S. Forest Service and the Gypsy Moth Slow the Spread Foundation Inc.

Gypsy moths feed on the leaves of more than 300 species of trees and shrubs, predominantly hardwoods. When areas become heavily infested, trees may be completely stripped of foliage, leaving yard trees and entire forests more susceptible to attacks from other pests. Severe infestations often lead to tree death.

Gypsy moth caterpillars can also pose public health concerns for people with respiratory problems. In high-density gypsy moth populations, the caterpillar hairs and droppings may cause severe allergic reactions.

NCD&CS has addressed spot introductions of the gypsy moth across North Carolina since the 1970s. The department is working with eight other states through the Gypsy Moth Slow the Spread Foundation Inc. and with other state and federal agencies to reduce the expansion of the gypsy moth into uninfested areas of the state.

A public hearing was held in February to receive input from landowners inside and within about 3,300 feet of the treatment block.

For more information, including maps and a description of the area treated, go to www.ncagr.com/plantindustry/plant/entomology/GM.htm or contact NCD&CS toll free at (800) 206-9333.

Troxler speaks at N.C. A&T State University’s 22nd Annual Small Farms Week celebration

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler spoke at Small Farms Week at N.C. A & T State University, highlighting the important role small farms play in the overall agricultural economy in the state. As part of the annual celebration, Nelson and Mary James of Maple Hill in Pender County were recognized as the 2008 Gilmer L. and Clara Y. Dudley Small Farmers of the Year.

N.C. agricultural planting intentions include more acres of soybeans, hay, tobacco and sweet potatoes

North Carolina farmers say they will plant more soybeans, hay, tobacco and sweet potatoes than last year, according to a recent release of the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s Prospective Plantings report. Meanwhile, cotton acreage may see its lowest mark in 15 years.

N.C. growers intend to plant 1.6 million acres of soybeans this year, up 13 percent from a year ago and the highest acreage since 1989, the report said.

Wheat acreage in the state is now projected to be 820,000 acres, a record high. A USDA report last fall had projected 800,000 acres of winter wheat in the state.

“Soybean prices are strong, and it looks like many farmers want to plant soybeans after they harvest their winter wheat,” said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. “If the weather cooperates, wheat and soybeans could be a profitable combination for North Carolina farmers this year.”

It appears that North Carolina will remain the nation’s top producer of tobacco and sweet potatoes, with acreages projected to see gains of 1 percent and 7 percent, respectively.

Hay acreage, which was devastated by the drought last year, is projected to increase by 3 percent to 720,000 acres.

North Carolina growers planted 1.1 million acres of corn last year, only to see yields suffer because of the drought. “That painful memory and higher fertilizer prices could be factors in their intention to plant only 920,000 acres this year,” Troxler said.

Cotton acreage will drop for the second consecutive year, to 420,000 acres, the lowest mark since 1993. If the projection holds, cotton acreage will be less than half of what it was just two years ago. “It appears that farmers are going after the higher prices for soybeans and corn,” Troxler said.

The report, which contains information for the entire United States, is available online at www.usda.gov/nass/PUBS/TO-DAYRPT/pspl0308.pdf.

one end of the state to the other were dealt some pretty significant blows in 2007, and the drought has been particularly unforgiving. This will be an important program for farmers as they work to recover from this drought.”

Rep. Ray Rapp, co-chairman of the legislative committee, said a bill seeking an additional $6 million to extend the program to more farmers will be submitted to the General Assembly in May.

“We recognized that any proposal we made to the legislature could not go into effect before July at the earliest, too late to save many of our farmers,” Rapp said. “Fortunately, the friends of agriculture in North Carolina are not limited to members of the General Assembly. Money from the Tobacco Trust Fund lets us put this project into effect immediately.”

The U.S. Department of Agriculture last year designated 85 of North Carolina’s 100 counties as natural disaster areas. As of April 15, 80 counties remained under drought conditions with the other 20 considered abnormally dry.

Farmers affected by the drought may apply to one of the state’s 96 Soil and Water Conservation district offices for help with several types of projects. These include pasture renovation, drilling and re-drilling wells, pond construction and renovation, converting closed lagoons to fresh water ponds, and upgrading existing irrigation systems to more efficient models. The program is open to farmers with a total adjusted gross income of less than $250,000 or those who derive 75 percent of their income from farming operations.

“North Carolina farmers lost a half billion dollars in crops last year because of this drought – that’s 17 percent of total crop revenue in a typical year,” said Sen. Charlie Albertson, also a committee co-chair. “The damage wasn’t merely in lost harvest. Pastureland needs to be renovated and reseeded before livestock can graze again, and we’re still in this drought. Farmers really need our help to go forward.”
